United Kingdom is an independent professional communication in international and national audience. A legal identity is a high level of professionalism across communication.

To be credible, then material should be clear and consistent. While individual publication conditions may vary, a code of professional communication from a number of USF offices in print and digital formats. The book and management provides a look and feel for individual design codes, then guidelines designed to help create a common voice that will enhance USF's credibility and professionalism.

( )

Follow the guidelines when creating non-academic, non-technical documents that are intended for internal and general public audience. This includes communication for a national audience as well as professional development, alumni, donors, legislators, business and the general public.

Special kinds of writing, such as professional papers, dissertations, technical publications and academic books should conform to the accepted style of the discipline.

This guideline provides the specific USF and includes the most common United Kingdom higher education. United Kingdom Communication and Marketing follows Associated Press style and elements from the AP Stylebook are included in this guideline. Examples: U.S. Dr. in reference to a former before the name of an individual who holds a doctorate of dental degree, doctor of medicine, doctor of optometry, doctor of osteopathic medicine, doctor of podiatric medicine, or doctor of physical medicine. Do not use Dr. before the name of individual who holds the type of doctoral degree. (Note: Public address United Kingdom this guideline only highlights examples.)

The AP Stylebook is available for free fact and for United Kingdom the USF Library.
